The Woodson Banneker Jackson –Bey/Marcus Garvey Study Group is a Washington, D.C. based coalition of Pan-African organizations and individuals that is dedicated to the study, promotion, and practice the philosophies of African Nationalism, Self-Reliance, and Race First (all known as Garveyism) with both a local and international focus.

The study group is designed to be utilized by the local Pan-African Community to increase the support of existing programs and institutions, as well as developing new programs and institutions through workshop and lecture methods. These methods are used to promote the merits of promising and successful programs and institutions that are beneficial to the Pan-African Community in order to gain community support. They are also used to generate analysis of pertinent issues within the local and international community in order to provide practical solutions to these issues and, within these solutions, to design and coordinate activities to meet specific targeted goals and outcomes.

The general areas that are covered within the study group sessions include economics, politics, culture, health and education. Each session topic is organized and presented with either a Global Pan-African or Local D.C. Metropolitan Area focus.
